

National Native Bee Project

How it works. The program is based on using as it's national model, the first pollinator garden planted at Joann O'Connell school in Erie, Pa. This will be duplicated simultaneously in Sherman, NY and Lordstown, OH. These three schools utilizing their students will be educated so as to gain a full understanding of the importance the pollinators have in this world and what they can do to promote and protect them. We will then ask the students in these schools to forward what they have learned to other schools across the nation. We will then try to coordinate the students in a national effort to reach out to the world in a single day, to share what they have learned, (the goal is to touch 100,000,000 people in a single day) and drive them to the kickstart program where the targeted goal people will then be able to participate in a program to set up the first national pollinator migratory route in the United States. The kickstart program will allow then average individual to be educated up to date all that we know and show them how they can actually get involved.
